

Another successful workshop at Henley Business School (UK)

We are just back from another successful workshop at Henley Business School (UK). Our Malta-based cohort, on their second year of their Henley MBA journey, joined a truly international intake coming from New Zealand, Poland, Canada and Dubai to mention just a few. This translated into fantastic learning opportunities through the varied experiences that each programme member brought with him or her to Greenlands. The wide-ranging roles of the 40plus programme members following this workshop, were also beneficial for networking and started off many interesting discussions.

Associate Executive Professor Martin Aylward kept the programme members focused, while his extensive knowledge and experience in the field of Strategy provided the right mix of theory and practical application. Programme members were encouraged to analyse and identify strategic options within their own companies or organisations. The second part of the workshop was delivered by Dr David Ewers, where his experience of the financial world could be translated in both theoretical and practical approaches. Of particular interest to the programme members was the role play and group work when considering mergers and acquisitions.
